Helping your children choose books they will love

Lovereading4kids.co.uk is a book website created for parents and children to make choosing books easy and fun

Opening extract from Nadine Dreams of Home

Written by Bernard Ashley
Illustrated by
Ollie Cuthbertson

Published by Barrington Stoke Ltd

All Text is Copyright © of the Author and/or Illustrator

Please print off and read at your leisure.

Contents

1	Not a Word	1
2	Like a Book	5
3	At the Library	9
4	A Picture of Home	13
5	This Is Now	25
6	Deep in Her Bones	31
7	Thump, Thump, Thump	37
8	Together	45

First published in 2014 in Great Britain by Barrington Stoke Ltd 18 Walker Street, Edinburgh, EH3 7LP

www.barringtonstoke.co.uk

This story was first published in a different form in Stacks of Stories (Hodder Children's Books, 1997)

> Text © 1997 Bernard Ashley Illustrations © 2014 Ollie Cuthbertson

The moral right of Bernard Ashley and Ollie Cuthbertson to be identified as the author and illustrator of this work has been asserted in accordance with the Copyright, Designs and Patents Act, 1988

All rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced in whole or in any part in any form without the written permission of the publisher

A CIP catalogue record for this book is available from the British Library upon request

ISBN: 978-1-78112-369-0

Printed in China by Leo

Chapter 1 Not a Word

Nadine looked round the big classroom. It had more than 30 children in it, but there were no other Goma children. No one else who spoke Nadine's language.

It was real scary, here in Britain. Not scary like when you had to run away from the stink of burning buildings or the sound of shooting. And not scary like when you had to try to hide from the rebel soldiers with your mother and your little brother. But scary in other ways.

There was the noise of London – that was scary. The lorries rattled like troop carriers, and the buses hissed their brakes like rockets skimming across the sky. And when the low planes came into City Airport – Nadine's mother still ducked her head as if they might be about to drop bombs.

And there was another sort of scary, which was just as bad, in its own way. The scary of being on their own, the three of them, in the flats where they lived, as high as kites fly. The three of them without Nadine's father, Fabrice. He had got them out of Goma on the last plane before the rebels took over the airstrip and took Fabrice off with them.

So Nadine, her mother and Prince were on their own without a word of English. Nadine's father had been a teacher, and he spoke good French and English. If only he were here, he would help them in this foreign land.

Nadine came to school every day and tried like mad to understand what people were saying. And sometimes she could pick out a few words. But at night she cried for her father and went to sleep with her face stained with tears.

2

She dreamed one special dream – that one day she would go to the airport with her mother and brother, and see her father coming through that Arrivals door. Coming to live with them, to make them all together again. After that, everything would be a million times better.

