

Helping your children choose books they will love

Lovereading4kids.co.uk is a book website created for parents and children to make choosing books easy and fun

Opening extract from
The Grunts in a Jam

Written by Philip Ardagh
Illustrated by
Axel Scheffler

Published by
Nosy Crow Ltd

All Text is Copyright © of the Author and/or Illustrator

Please print off and read at your leisure.

Lovereading  .co.uk

This book is dedicated to Wildlife SOS, fighting to save India's wildlife, including the likes of Raju the elephant

First published in the UK in 2014 by Nosy Crow Ltd
The Crow's Nest, 10a Lant Street
London, SE1 1QR, UK

Nosy Crow and associated logos are trademarks and/or registered trademarks of Nosy Crow Ltd

Text © Philip Ardagh, 2014
Cover and inside illustrations © Axel Scheffler, 2014

The right of Philip Ardagh and Axel Scheffler to be identified as the author and illustrator respectively has been asserted.

All rights reserved

1 3 5 7 9 10 8 6 4 2

A CIP catalogue record for this book is available from the British Library

This book is sold subject to the condition that it shall not, by way of trade or otherwise, be lent, hired out or otherwise circulated in any form of binding or cover other than that in which it is published. No part of this publication may be reproduced, stored in a retrieval system, or transmitted in any form or by any means (electronic, mechanical, photocopying, recording or otherwise) without the prior written permission of Nosy Crow Ltd.

Printed and bound in the UK by Clays Ltd, St Ives Plc

Papers used by Nosy Crow are made from wood grown in sustainable forests.

ISBN: 978 0 85763 075 9

Check out the buzz at www.meetthegrunts.com

Chapter One

A Most

Tempting Nose

Mr Grunt was staring at a squirrel and the squirrel was staring back at Mr Grunt, with his big squirrely eyes. (The squirrel had the squirrely eyes. Not Mr Grunt.) The squirrel was a rather mangy-looking thing. His tail looked less like fur and more like a large feather that had been used as a quill pen and played with by small, sticky-fingered children. The animal was up a tree in a hedgerow lining a narrow lane. He stood on a swaying branch that seemed far too thin to take his weight.

Mr Grunt was leaning out of the upstairs bedroom window of the Grunts' truly dreadful caravan, his head framed either side by a curtain made from an old dressing gown. He was about the same height off the ground as the squirrel and – because the caravan almost took up the width of the lane – very close to the animal indeed.

It was obvious neither of them was going to blink and risk losing the staring match, so Mr Grunt decided to shout instead.

“Tree rat!” he yelled.

“Chrrrrrgggg!” chattered the squirrel.

“Clear off!” said Mr Grunt.

The squirrel quivered his tail in a don’t-mess-with-me manner and ch-ch-chattered some more.

The problem, in Mr Grunt’s eyes at least, was that he was convinced that this squirrel – this self-same squirrel, this very one – had been following them for days and was a THIEF. Whenever they stopped for a break, the squirrel would sneak among them and take some of Fingers’ peanuts.

Fingers was the elephant who pulled the Grunts' caravan. This job used to belong to the two donkeys – Clip and her twin brother Clop – but they'd retired. They now had a trailer all of their very own, hooked to the back of the caravan, and Fingers pulled them all along with a wave of the trunk and the greatest of ease.

Fingers' favourite, favourite, favourite food was stale currant buns. I suspect an elephantologist at the University of Elephantology will tell you that it's far healthier for elephants to eat certain types of plant, but what Fingers liked best was BUNS.

He was also partial to peanuts in their shells – they made good snacks and rewards – so Mr Grunt took a regular supply from the local grocery store.

I say “local” because, unlike the old days where home was wherever they decided to park their caravan, the Grunts now had a base. They lived in the grounds of Bigg Manor, a stately home that looked very impressive from the outside but which was little more than an empty shell.

I say “took” because he – er – stole them.

The nearby grocery store was called Hall’s Groceries and was owned and run by a woman called Miss Winterbottom. (The last Hall to work at Hall’s Groceries was Mr Jon Hall, who died in 1887.)

Mr and Mrs Grunt used to laugh about Miss Winterbottom’s name behind her back.

Actually, they also used to laugh about her name to her left, to her right and directly in front of her. And they always pointed.

One day, after about a year, Mrs Grunt came up with an extraordinarily clever and original nickname for Miss Winterbottom. She called her “Miss Cold Bum”, laughed out loud at her own genius wordplay and then promptly almost choked on the dog biscuit she’d just popped in her mouth.

Having been called “Cold Bum” by other children since she was about three years old, Miss Winterbottom was neither impressed by Mrs Grunt’s wit nor bothered by her name-calling. What she was bothered by was her shoplifting a dog biscuit, which is why she thwacked Mrs Grunt with one of those wide, flat-brushed brooms.

Mrs Grunt was a large woman, often mistaken for a block of wood or an angry rock, so you could imagine her thwacking people with brooms, but Miss Winterbottom was a very different matter. She'd won the southern heat of the Miss Dainty Lady Shopkeeper Contest on a number of occasions. She was very petite, had golden hair and was generally thought to be very pretty indeed. Stick a broom in her hand, though, and it became a lethal weapon.

THWACK!

“Argh!” shouted Mrs Grunt, spitting masticated dog biscuit everywhere. “Stop it!” (“Masticated” is a grown-up word for “chewed”, used by clever authors of children’s books.)

