

Helping your children choose books they will love

Lovereading4kids.co.uk is a book website created for parents and children to make choosing books easy and fun

Opening extract from
The Little Girl and the Tiny Doll

Written by Aingelda Ardizzone, Edward Ardizzone

Published by Puffin Books

All Text is Copyright © of the Author and/or Illustrator

Please print off and read at your leisure.

There was once a tiny doll who belonged to a girl who did not care for dolls so her life was very dull.

For a long time she lay forgotten in a mackintosh pocket until one rainy day when the girl was out shopping.

The girl was following her mother round a grocer's shop when she put her hand in her pocket and felt something hard. She took it out and saw it was the doll.

‘Ugly old thing,’ she said and quickly put it back again, as she thought, into her pocket.

But, in fact, it fell unnoticed into the deep freeze container among the frozen peas.

The tiny doll lay quite still for a long time, wondering what was to become of her.

She felt so sad, partly because she did not like being called ugly and partly because she was lost.

It was very cold in the deep freeze and the tiny doll began to feel rather stiff, so she decided to walk about and have a good look at the place.

The floor was crisp and white just like frost on a winter's morning.

There were many packets of peas piled one on top of the other.
They seemed to her like great big buildings. The cracks between the piles were rather like narrow streets.

She walked one way and then the other, passing, not only packets of peas, but packets of sliced beans, spinach, broccoli and mixed vegetables. Then she turned a corner and found herself among beef rissoles and fish fingers. However, she did not stop but went on exploring until she came to boxes of strawberries;

and then ice cream.

The strawberries reminded her of the time when she was lost once before among the strawberry plants in a garden.

Then she sat all day in the sun
smelling and eating strawberries.

Now she made herself as comfortable as possible.