

LoveReading4kids.co.uk
is a book website
created for parents and children to make
choosing books easy
and fun

Opening extract from
Lydia: The Wild Girl of Pride & Prejudice

Written by
Natasha Farrant

Published by
Chicken House Ltd

All Text is Copyright © of the Author and/or Illustrator

Please print off and read at your leisure.

Text © Natasha Farrant 2016

First published in Great Britain in 2016
Chicken House
2 Palmer Street
Frome, Somerset BA11 1DS
United Kingdom
www.chickenhousebooks.com

Natasha Farrant has asserted her right under the Copyright, Designs and Patents Act 1988 to be identified as the author of this work.

All rights reserved.

No part of this publication may be reproduced or transmitted or utilized in any form or by any means, electronic, mechanical, photocopying or otherwise, without the prior permission of the publisher.

Cover design and interior design by Helen Crawford-White
Decorative illustrations © Qilli/Shutterstock
Typeset by Dorchester Typesetting Group Ltd

Printed and bound in Great Britain by CPI Group (UK) Ltd, Croydon CR0 4YY

The paper used in this Chicken House book is made from wood grown in sustainable forests.

1 3 5 7 9 10 8 6 4 2

British Library Cataloguing in Publication data available.

ISBN 978-1-910002-97-1

eISBN 978-1-910655-59-7

Hertfordshire

1811

but really DECADES behind the civilized world because we are in the Depths of the English countryside where nothing
EVER
happens

Thursday, 13th June

I am fifteen years old today, and this journal was a present from Mary. She says I must write in it every day to improve my mind.

“Whatever for,” Mamma cried, “when she is so pretty?”

Father asked, “Are we even certain Lydia has a mind?”

“Of course she does!” Mary said. “It’s just not very developed.”

“Excuse me!” I tried to look down my nose at her, which was not easy because I was sitting and she was standing. “Right now, my undeveloped mind thinks you are extremely rude.”

Mamma snatched the diary out of my hand and waved it about like a murder weapon. “You had much better have given her some ribbon! She is so clever at making things.”

“What should I write about?” I asked, retrieving the diary.

“Reflections and meditations,” Mary murmured. “Prayers. Observations. The opposite of your usual frivolities.”

“I am not frivolous,” I snarled.

Father cried, “Ha!” and left the room.

“You are a bit,” Kitty said.

“Just write down what you do each day, dear.” Jane frowned at Kitty and Mary, urging them to be nice.

“And how it makes you feel,” Lizzy added.

So, to begin!

For breakfast, Hill made my favourite sweet rolls, with fresh cream and raspberry jam, which made me happy. Then my sisters gave me my presents in order of age, as always, from the oldest to the youngest.

Jane gave me some lace to trim my new sprigged muslin. This also made me happy. Jane always gives the prettiest things.

Lizzy gave me a yellow ribbon for my bonnet, which made me cross because she knows I wanted the lilac.

Mary gave me this journal (and I have already said quite enough about that).

Kitty gave me a needlepoint cushion. “Lord knows what you will do with it,” she said, “but cushions are the only thing I know how to make. You needn’t pretend to like it.” So I didn’t, but then one of the new tabby kittens kneaded it with his tiny claws, clambered on to it with his tiny legs, and fell asleep with tiny snores. It is a perfect kitten bed. Kitty and I carried him up to our room. We have called him Napoleon, because he is small but already tyrannical. And so the cushion was good, too.

My father gave me five shillings and my mother gave me her jade earrings, the ones I have wanted for ever, and these made me feel almost rich.

“The earrings were to be yours after I am gone,” Mamma said. “Lord knows your inheritance will be small enough, but you are growing up so fast, my Lydia! And even though everyone knows how I suffer from my nerves, the doctor assures me that I am unlikely to die for years. You had much better enjoy the earrings now while you are young and beautiful.”

This afternoon I wanted to walk to Meryton, as with Father’s shillings and my savings I finally have enough for the lavender gloves with grey pearl buttons in Savill’s, but it rained and I am reduced to writing, which is even harder work than I expected and is making my hand ache. This evening, my aunt and uncle Philips come to dinner with the Lucases, if the rain does not cause them all to cancel. Lord, how I wish we lived in a town like them! It may be only a mile away, but it might as well be twenty. It is too dull, being stuck out here in the country.

I showed my journal to Mary, and asked if my mind was improved yet. She said that it was not.

“Just try to write one thing each day that is sensible,” she said. “Or are you afraid someone will read it and discover you do have a brain after all?”

I grabbed the diary back from her.

“I am not afraid of anything,” I told her. “But Mamma was right. I would much sooner you had given me ribbons.”