

Opening extract from

The Dahlmanac 2

Written by Roald Dahl

Pulished by Pulished

All text is copyright of the author and illustrator

Please print off and read at your leisure.

Spots

Roald Dahl loved things that made the reader go 'yuk'. Spots made the reader go 'yuk'. Spots were just one of them. Frothing were just one designed to cure blue medicine designed another. blue medicine designed to wince and nasty grandmothers was another. If you're prepared to wince and squirm, then read on . . .

. Other Marvellous

Medicines

George isn't the only one to have invented a marvellous medicine. Check out these weird and wonderful ways of curing diseases and ailments . . .

Cooked mice were once used to treat whooping cough, smallpox and measles.

They could be either roasted or fried. But if you had chickenpox, then the cure was to drink a soup made from mouse tails.

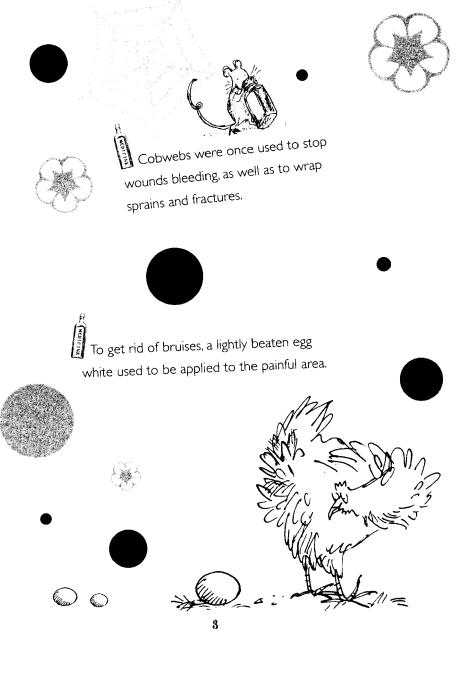

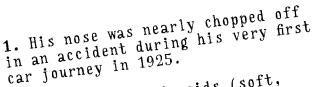

Garlic was said to cure headaches (and keep away vampires).

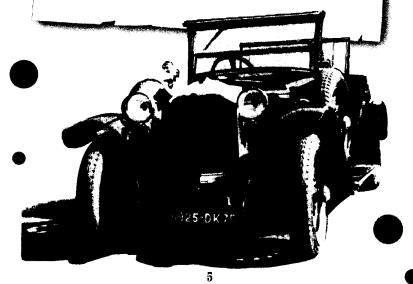

Things you never knew about Roald Dahl's INOSE

- 2. Roald Dahl's adenoids (soft, squidgy bits at the back of the nose and throat) were mercilessly sliced out by a doctor, of all people! out when he was eight. Worse still, the doctor didn't use anaesthetic. Ouch!
 - 3. Roald Dahl broke his nose in a plane crash during the Second World War.
 - 4. . . . but the surgeon rebuilt it in the style of a silent-film star called Rudolph Valentino, so it looked better than before.
 - 5. His favourite smell in the whole world was that of bacon sizzling in a frying pan. Mmm . . .

Roald Dahl says...

'My nose had been cut almost clean off my face as I went through the rear windscreen and now it was hanging on by a single small thread of skin. My mother disentangled herself from the scrimmage and grabbed a handkerchief from her purse. She clapped the dangling nose back into place fast and held it there?

Horrible illmesses

and diseases with wonderful names

Alice-in-Wonderland syndrome

Often linked with migraines, this condition makes people, animals and objects look very small indeed.

Alien-hand syndrome

People with this condition lose control of one hand. The hand acts as if it has a mind of its own.

Beriberi

Not an obsession with fruit, this is an illness caused by a lack of vitamin B1. Symptoms range from weakness and pain to death.

Ondine's curse

Sufferers have to think about every breath they take. If they do not concentrate, they stop breathing and suffocate. Falling asleep can be fatal.

Pica

This is an urge to eat things that shouldn't be eaten, such as clay, stones and even hair. Urgh.

Spotty Powder

Old you know that Roald Dahi once wrote about a miracle powder that promised to bring children out in a weird and wonderful pach of spots? Well, he did. The chapter was originally included in Charlle and the Checolate Pictory. But there were too many heathry children in the earlier versions of the book, so 'Spotty Bowder' — and the revolting Miranda Piker — had to be dropped. I notify, it was kept in a very safe place, so you could read it here:

'THIS stuff,' said Mr Wonka, 'is going to cause chaos in schools all over the world when I get it in the shops.'

The room they now entered had rows and rows of pipes coming straight up out of the floor.

The pipes were bent over at the top and they looked like large walking sticks. Out of every pipe there trickled a stream of white crystals. Hundreds of Oompa-Loompas were running to and fro, catching the crystals in little golden boxes and stacking the boxes against the walls.

'Spotty Powder!' exclaimed Mr Wonka, beaming at the company. 'There it is! That's it! Fantastic stuff!'

'It looks like sugar,' said Miranda Piker.

'It's meant to look like sugar,' Mr Wonka said. 'And it tastes like sugar. But it isn't sugar. Oh, dear me, no.'

"Then what is it?' asked Miranda Piker, speaking rather rudely.

'That door over there,' said Mr Wonka, turning away from Miranda and pointing to a small red door at the far end of the room, 'leads directly down to the machine that makes the powder. Twice a day, I go down there myself to feed it. But I'm the only one. Nobody ever comes with me.'

They all stared at the little door on which it said MOST SECRET – KEEP OUT.

The hum and throb of powerful machinery could be heard coming up from the depths below, and the floor itself was vibrating all the time. The children could feel it through the soles of their shoes.

Miranda Piker now pushed forward and stood in front of Mr Wonka. She was a nasty-looking girl with a smug face and a smirk on her mouth, and whenever she spoke it was always with a voice that seemed to be saying, 'Everybody is a fool except me.'

'OK,' Miranda Piker said, smirking at Mr Wonka. 'So what's the big news? What's this stuff meant to do when you eat it?'

'Ah-ha,' said Mr Wonka, his eyes sparkling with glee. 'You'd never guess that, not in a million years. Now listen. All you have to do is sprinkle it over your cereal at breakfast-time, pretending it's sugar. Then you eat it. And then, exactly five seconds after that, you come out in bright red spots all over your face and neck.'

'What sort of a silly ass wants spots on his face at breakfast-time?' said Miranda Piker.

'Let me finish,' said Mr Wonka. 'So then your mother looks at you across the table and says, "My poor child. You must have chickenpox. You can't possibly go to school today." So you stay at home. But by lunch-time, the spots have all disappeared.'

'Terrific!' shouted Charlie.'That's just what I want for the day we have exams!'

'That is the ideal time to use it,' said Mr Wonka. 'But you mustn't do it too often or it'll give the game away. Keep it for the really nasty days.'

'Father!' cried Miranda Piker. 'Did you hear what this stuff does? It's shocking! It mustn't be allowed!'

Mr Piker, Miranda's father, stepped forward and faced Mr Wonka. He had a smooth white face like a boiled onion.

Spotty Powder

'Now see here, Wonka,' he said. 'I happen to be the headmaster of a large school, and I won't allow you to sell this rubbish to the children! It's . . . criminal! Why, you'll ruin the school system of the entire country!'

'I hope so,' said Mr Wonka.

'It's got to be stopped!' shouted Mr Piker, waving his cane.

'Who's going to stop it?' asked Mr Wonka. 'In my factory, I make things to please children. I don't care about grown-ups.'

'I am top of my form,' Miranda Piker said, smirking at Mr Wonka. 'And I've never missed a day's school in my life.'

'Then it's time you did,' Mr Wonka said.

'How dare you!' said Mr Piker.

'All holidays and vacations should be stopped!' cried Miranda. 'Children are meant to work, not play.'

'Quite right, my girl,' cried Mr Piker, patting Miranda on the top of the head. 'All work and no play has made you what you are today.'

'Isn't she wonderful?' said Mrs Piker, beaming at her daughter.

'Come on then, Father!' cried Miranda. 'Let's go down into the cellar and smash the machine that makes this dreadful stuff!'

'Forward!' shouted Mr Piker, brandishing his cane and making a dash for the little red door on which it said MOST SECRET – KEEP OUT.

'Stop!' said Mr Wonka. 'Don't go in there! It's terribly secret!' 'Let's see you stop us, you old goat!' shouted Miranda.

'We'll smash it to smithereens!' yelled Mr Piker. And a few seconds later the two of them had disappeared through the door.

There was a moment's silence.

Then, far off in the distance, from somewhere deep underground, there came a fearful scream.

'That's my husband!' cried Mrs Piker, going blue in the face.

There was another scream.

'And that's Miranda!' yelled Mrs Piker, beginning to hop around in circles. 'What's happening to them? What have you got down there, you dreadful beast?'

'Oh nothing much,' Mr Wonka answered. 'Just a lot of cogs and wheels and chains and things like that, all going round and round and round.'

'You villain!' she screamed. 'I know your tricks! You're grinding them into powder! In two minutes my darling Miranda will come pouring out of one of those dreadful pipes, and so will my husband!'

'Of course,' said Mr Wonka. 'That's part of the recipe.'

'It's what!'

'We've got to use one or two schoolmasters occasionally or it wouldn't work.'

'Did you hear him?' shrieked Mrs Piker, turning to the others. 'He admits it! He's nothing but a cold-blooded murderer!'

Mr Wonka smiled and patted Mrs Piker gently on the arm.

'Dear lady,' he said, 'I was only joking.'

'Then why did they scream?' snapped Mrs Piker. 'I distinctly heard them scream!'

'Those weren't screams,' Mr Wonka said. 'They were laughs.' 'My husband never laughs,' said Mrs Piker.

Mr Wonka flicked his fingers, and up came an Oompa Loompa.

'Kindly escort Mrs Piker to the boiler room,' Mr Wonka said. 'Don't fret, dear lady,' he went on, shaking Mrs Piker warmly by the hand. 'They'll all come out in the wash. There's nothing to worry about. Off you go. Thank you for coming. Farewell! Goodbye! A pleasure to meet you!'

'Listen, Charlie!' said Grandpa Joe. 'The Oompa-Loompas are starting to sing again!'

'Oh, Miranda Mary Piker!' sang the five Oompa-Loompas, dancing about and laughing and beating madly on their tiny drums.

'Oh, Miranda Mary Piker,
How could anybody like her,
Such a priggish and revolting little kid.
So we said, "Why don't we fix her
In the Spotty-Powder mixer
Then we're bound to like her better than we did
Soon this child who is so vicious
Will have gotten quite delicious,
And her classmates will have surely understood
That instead of saying, "Miranda!
Oh, the beast! We cannot stand her!"
They'll be saying, "Oh, how useful and how good!"

