

LoveReading4kids.co.uk is a book website created for parents and children to make choosing books easy
and fun

Opening extract from Sputnik's Guide to Life on Earth

Written by Frank Cottrell Boyce

Illustrated by Steve Lenton

Published by Macmillan Children's Books

All Text is Copyright © of the Author and/or Illustrator

Please print off and read at your leisure.

First published 2016 by Macmillan Children's Books an imprint of Pan Macmillan
20 New Wharf Road, London N1 9RR
Associated companies throughout the world
www.panmacmillan.com

ISBN 978-0-230-77137-6

Text copyright © Frank Cottrell Boyce 2016
Illustrations copyright © Steven Lenton 2016

The right of Frank Cottrell Boyce and Steven Lenton to be identified as the author and illustrator of this work has been asserted by them in accordance with the Copyright, Designs and Patents Act 1988.

All rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced, stored in a retrieval system, or transmitted, in any form or by any means (electronic, mechanical, photocopying, recording or otherwise), without the prior written permission of the publisher.

Pan Macmillan does not have any control over, or any responsibility for, any author or third-party websites referred to in or on this book.

1 3 5 7 9 8 6 4 2

A CIP catalogue record for this book is available from the British Library.

Printed and bound by CPI Group (UK) Ltd, Croydon CR0 4YY

This book is sold subject to the condition that it shall not, by way of trade or otherwise, be lent, resold, hired out, or otherwise circulated without the publisher's prior consent in any form of binding or cover other than that in which it is published and without a similar condition including this condition being imposed on the subsequent purchaser.

Before you start anything, make a list. That's what my grandad says. If you're making a cake, make a list. If you're moving house, make a list. If you're running away to sea, make a list.

At least, that's what he used to say. Nowadays who knows what he's going to say? Sometimes he looks in the mirror and says, 'Who's a bonnie boy then, eh?' Sometimes he looks in the mirror and shouts, 'Who's this old bod in my mirror?! What's he doing in my bedroom?'

Sometimes he comes into the kitchen and says, 'Tickets, please!'

And it's no good saying, 'Grandad, you're not on a ship any more. This is the kitchen. I don't need a ticket,' because that just gets him going.

If he asks for a ticket, I just look in my pocket for a piece of paper, hand it over and wait to see what he does.

Usually it's 'That seems to be in order. Take a seat and enjoy your voyage'. Then he gives you a little salute and you salute him back.

Sometimes it's 'This is a second-class ticket, not valid in this part of the ship'. Then I have to go out into the sitting room, wait a bit and come back in again.

Today was a 'Tickets, please!' day, so I handed him the red notebook I was holding, open as though it was my passport. I said, 'I think you'll find this is in order.'

1. Spicy Chicken Wings
2. 28 June - Annabel's Birthday
3. Lightsabers
4. Mooring Hitch Knots
5. Laika
6. The Companion
7. 1kg Plain Flour, 1 Tub Margarine, 500g Mushrooms
8. Milk
9. Chicken-and-Mushroom Pie
10. Spanish Lessons
11. Eggs
12. Concealer

13. Post-It Notes
14. 31 July - St Peter's Summer Treat
15. TV Remote Control
16. Curtains
17. Jailbreak
18. Geese
19. Be Nice
20. Spaghetti
21. Fire Drill
22. Shangri-La
23. Stairlift
24. Teeth
25. Grandad's Harmonica
26. Postcards
27. The Sea Chest

He gave it the hard stare.

Then he gave me the hard stare.

'I know a list when I see one,' he said, 'and this –' he shoved it back into my hand – 'is just a shopping list. Mostly.'

'Now that,' I said, 'is where you're wrong. This is a list of all the startling things that happened this summer.'

'What happened this summer?'

‘Read it and see. I probably shouldn’t have written it all down. It might get me into trouble. We broke a lot of laws, including some of the laws of physics. But I wrote everything down anyway because I didn’t want to forget any of it.’

1.

Spicy Chicken Wings

I don't know why I answered the door.

It wasn't even my own door.

By then I was staying at the Children's Temporary Accommodation, but in the summer they put you with a family. They put me on a farm called Stramoddie with a family called the Blythes. It's right down near Knockbren.

When Mrs Rowland from the Temporary dropped me off, she said, 'This is Prez. He's a good boy but he doesn't talk much. He's very helpful, but perhaps best not to let him near your kitchen knives.'

'When you say he doesn't talk . . .'

'Hasn't said a word in months.'

'Just exactly what we need,' said the dad. 'Someone to balance out our Jessie. Jessie does enough talking for ten families.'

That's one good thing about not talking, by the way – you don't have to work out what to call the mum and dad. You can't call them Mum and Dad, because they're not your mum or your dad. Calling them Mr and Mrs Whatever would be weird. And calling them by their first names is even weirder.

'Even if you did want to speak, Prez, you wouldn't get a word in. This is the House of Blether.'

He was not joking. Mostly they talk so much and so loud, you can't tell who's saying what. Though mostly it's Jessie.

'Everyone to the kitchen!'

'Wait
a minute!'

'No!

'I hate baked potatoes.'

No more minutes, we've waited long enough.'

'Say hello to Prez.'

'It's not a restaurant.'

'Who's Prez?
Oh. Hi.'

'I hate sitting here.'

'No phones at the dinner table!'

Then they all drop their heads and say a prayer very quietly. But the second they've said amen, they all start shouting again.

'Ray, do not reach for the water.
Ask someone to pass it!'

'Prez,
that big boy is Ray,
the little girl is Annabel and this is Jessie . . .'

'He's staying for the summer.
He normally lives with his grandad but . . .'

'Why do you live with your grandad?
Why don't you live with your mother?'

'Prez doesn't like to talk.'

'Why doesn't he like to talk?'

'He's not allowed near knives.'

'Some people just do live with their grandads, that's all.

Not everyone lives with their mum.'

'Why aren't you allowed knives?
Did you stab someone?'

'Jessie, it's really rude to ask people if they've ever stabbed people.'

Folk think that if you're not talking you're not listening. But that's not true. For instance, I was the only one who heard the doorbell the night that Sputnik came.

It was a Wednesday. Tea was spicy chicken wings, salad and baked potatoes. We'd finished eating and everyone was clearing up in the kitchen.

The doorbell rang.

The family didn't hear it because they were all shouting.

'Why is everyone shouting?'

'The radio's too loud.
We have to shout to be heard.'

'No. The radio is loud so I can hear it over the shouting.
If there wasn't shouting,
the radio would be quiet.'

The doorbell rang again.

I never answer doors, because answering doors means you have to speak to someone, sometimes a stranger even.

The doorbell rang again.

Then I thought, What if it's my grandad?!

I used to live with my grandad, but he got into a wee spot of bother and had to be taken away. That's how I ended up in the Children's Temporary. They said that if Grandad could get himself sorted out, he would be allowed to come back and I could go and live with him again.

Maybe this was Grandad – all sorted out and coming to take me back to the flat in Traquair Gardens.

Maybe I was going home.

So I answered the door.

But it wasn't Grandad. It was Sputnik.

I have to describe him because there's a lot of disagreement about what he looks like:

Height and age – about the same as me.

Clothes – unusual. For instance: slightly-too-big jumper, kilt, leather helmet like the ones pilots wear in war movies, with massive goggles.

Weapons – a massive pair of scissors stuffed into his belt like a sword. There were other weapons but I didn't know about them then or I definitely wouldn't have let him in.

Luggage – a big yellow backpack. I now know he more or less never takes that backpack off.

Name – Sputnik, though that's not what he said to start with.

Manners – not good. My grandad always says that good manners are important. 'Good manners tell you what to do when you don't know what to do,' he says. Sputnik put his hand out to me, so I shook it. That's good manners. But Sputnik did not shake back. Instead Sputnik grabbed my hand with both of his and swung himself in through the door, using my arms like a rope.

'Mellows?' he said.

Mellows is my second name. So I thought, This must be someone from the Temporary coming to take me back. Maybe Grandad had got himself sorted out. Maybe the family have complained about me.

'I too . . .' he said, pushing his goggles up on to the top of his head, 'am the Mellows.' He thumped his chest. It sounded like a drum.

Oh. We had the same name.

'The same name!' He flung his arms around me. I don't know much about hugs, but if a hug is so fierce it makes you worry that your lungs might pop out through your nostrils, that's a big hug.

I didn't know what to do. The Blythes were noisy, but I was pretty sure they'd notice if I let a stranger in goggles and a kilt into their front room. They seemed easy-going enough, but it had to be against the rules just to let any old stranger walk into the house.

'Stranger!' he said, as though he had heard what I was thinking. 'Stranger! Where's the stranger?! We have the same name. We. Are. Family!'

He strolled right past me, pulling his goggles back down.

The mum was in the living room about to turn the TV on, with her back to the door. Mellows put his hands on his hips and yelled, 'I. Am. Starving! Take me to your larder!' The mum spun round, dropped the remote, stared at him, then stared at me. I thought she was going to scream. But she didn't.

She smiled the biggest smile I'd ever seen her smile and she said, 'Ooohhhh, aren't you lovely?!'

'Yes,' said Mellows, 'I am lovely. Let the loveliness begin for the lovely one is here!' Then he actually sang, 'Here comes the Mellows!' to the tune of The Beatles' 'Here Comes the Sun'.

The mum looked at me and said, 'Is he lost?' She didn't wait for me to answer. 'Everyone, come and see!' The entire family avalanched into the living room.

'Amazing!' yelled Jessie. 'Did Dad bring him?'

'No. Prez did.'

'Prez? Really?'

'Nice one, Prez.'

Maybe I'd done the right thing.

Mellows strode over and shook Jessie's hand.

Jessie shouted, ‘Whoa! Did you see that? He shook hands with me!’ She seemed to think shaking hands was a rare and unusual thing, like walking on water or having hair made of snakes.

Annabel waddled past Jessie, saying, ‘Me now, me now.’ She shook hands with him and they all clapped.

Don’t get me wrong. When Mrs Rowland brought me down to Stramoddie, they were all really nice to me. The food was way better than in the Temporary, Ray let me have the top bunk, they gave me my own pair of wellies for walking around the farm, but nobody actually clapped. There was no fighting over whose turn it was to shake hands with me! And no one did what Jessie did to Mellows. She called him a ‘bonnie wee man’ and she rubbed noses with him!

The mum asked him if he was hungry.

‘Got it in one!’ roared Mellows. ‘That’s why I said, “Take me to your larder!” Do it now before I starve to death before your very eyes!’

He flung himself on to the floor as though he was dying there and then. The mum ran into the kitchen and came back with the leftover spicy chicken wings. If you’re going to eat food, it’s good manners to get a plate and a knife and fork and sit down. Unless it’s chips. You can eat chips in the park. But the mum did not give Mellows a knife and fork or a plate or a place at the table. No. She held a spicy chicken wing up in the air. Mellows looked up at it. Then she dropped the chicken right into his mouth. He chewed and sucked at it, then pulled the clean bones out of his mouth.

Not good manners.

I think if I'd done that people would have complained. When Mellows did it, they didn't complain. They clapped again.

The mum said he was a clever boy!

'No doubt about that,' said Mellows. 'I am a clever boy. I'm a chuffing genius if the truth be told.'

When the dad came in and saw Mellows sprawled on the couch, Jessie said, 'Can he stay? Can he stay? Please can he stay?'

'I suppose so,' said the dad with a big sigh. 'But just for tonight.'

'Shake hands with him!'

The dad shook hands with Mellows and asked him his name. Then he asked him his name again, like, 'What's his name? What's his name? What's his name?'

Mellows pleaded with me to make him stop.

‘Please tell this joker my name before he shakes my hand off!’

Before I could stop myself I said, ‘Mellows,’ out loud.

Everyone stared at me.

‘Yes! I am Mellows,’ said Mellows. He pointed at me. ‘Two merits for listening skills.’

No one looked at Mellows. They were all still staring at me.

‘Mellows?’ said the mum. ‘Like you, Prez? That’s lovely. Well done, Prez.’

I knew she meant, Well done for talking.

Until the night Sputnik came, I used to lie on the top bunk in Ray’s room every night, looking at the ceiling and worrying about Grandad. When Grandad used to go off on his big long walks, for instance, I always went after him to make sure he didn’t get lost. Who would go after him now? Maybe he wasn’t even allowed to go off any more? Maybe they locked him in?

But after Sputnik came I didn’t have time to think about anything but Sputnik. That first night, for instance, I was thinking . . . Sputnik rang the doorbell. But there is no front doorbell at Stramoddie.