LONDON OXFORD NEW YORK NEW DELHI SYDNEY

The King and Queen

were having breakfast, when a royal messenger burst in.

“A Giant Baby!” he gasped.

“Destroying everything
in its path.”

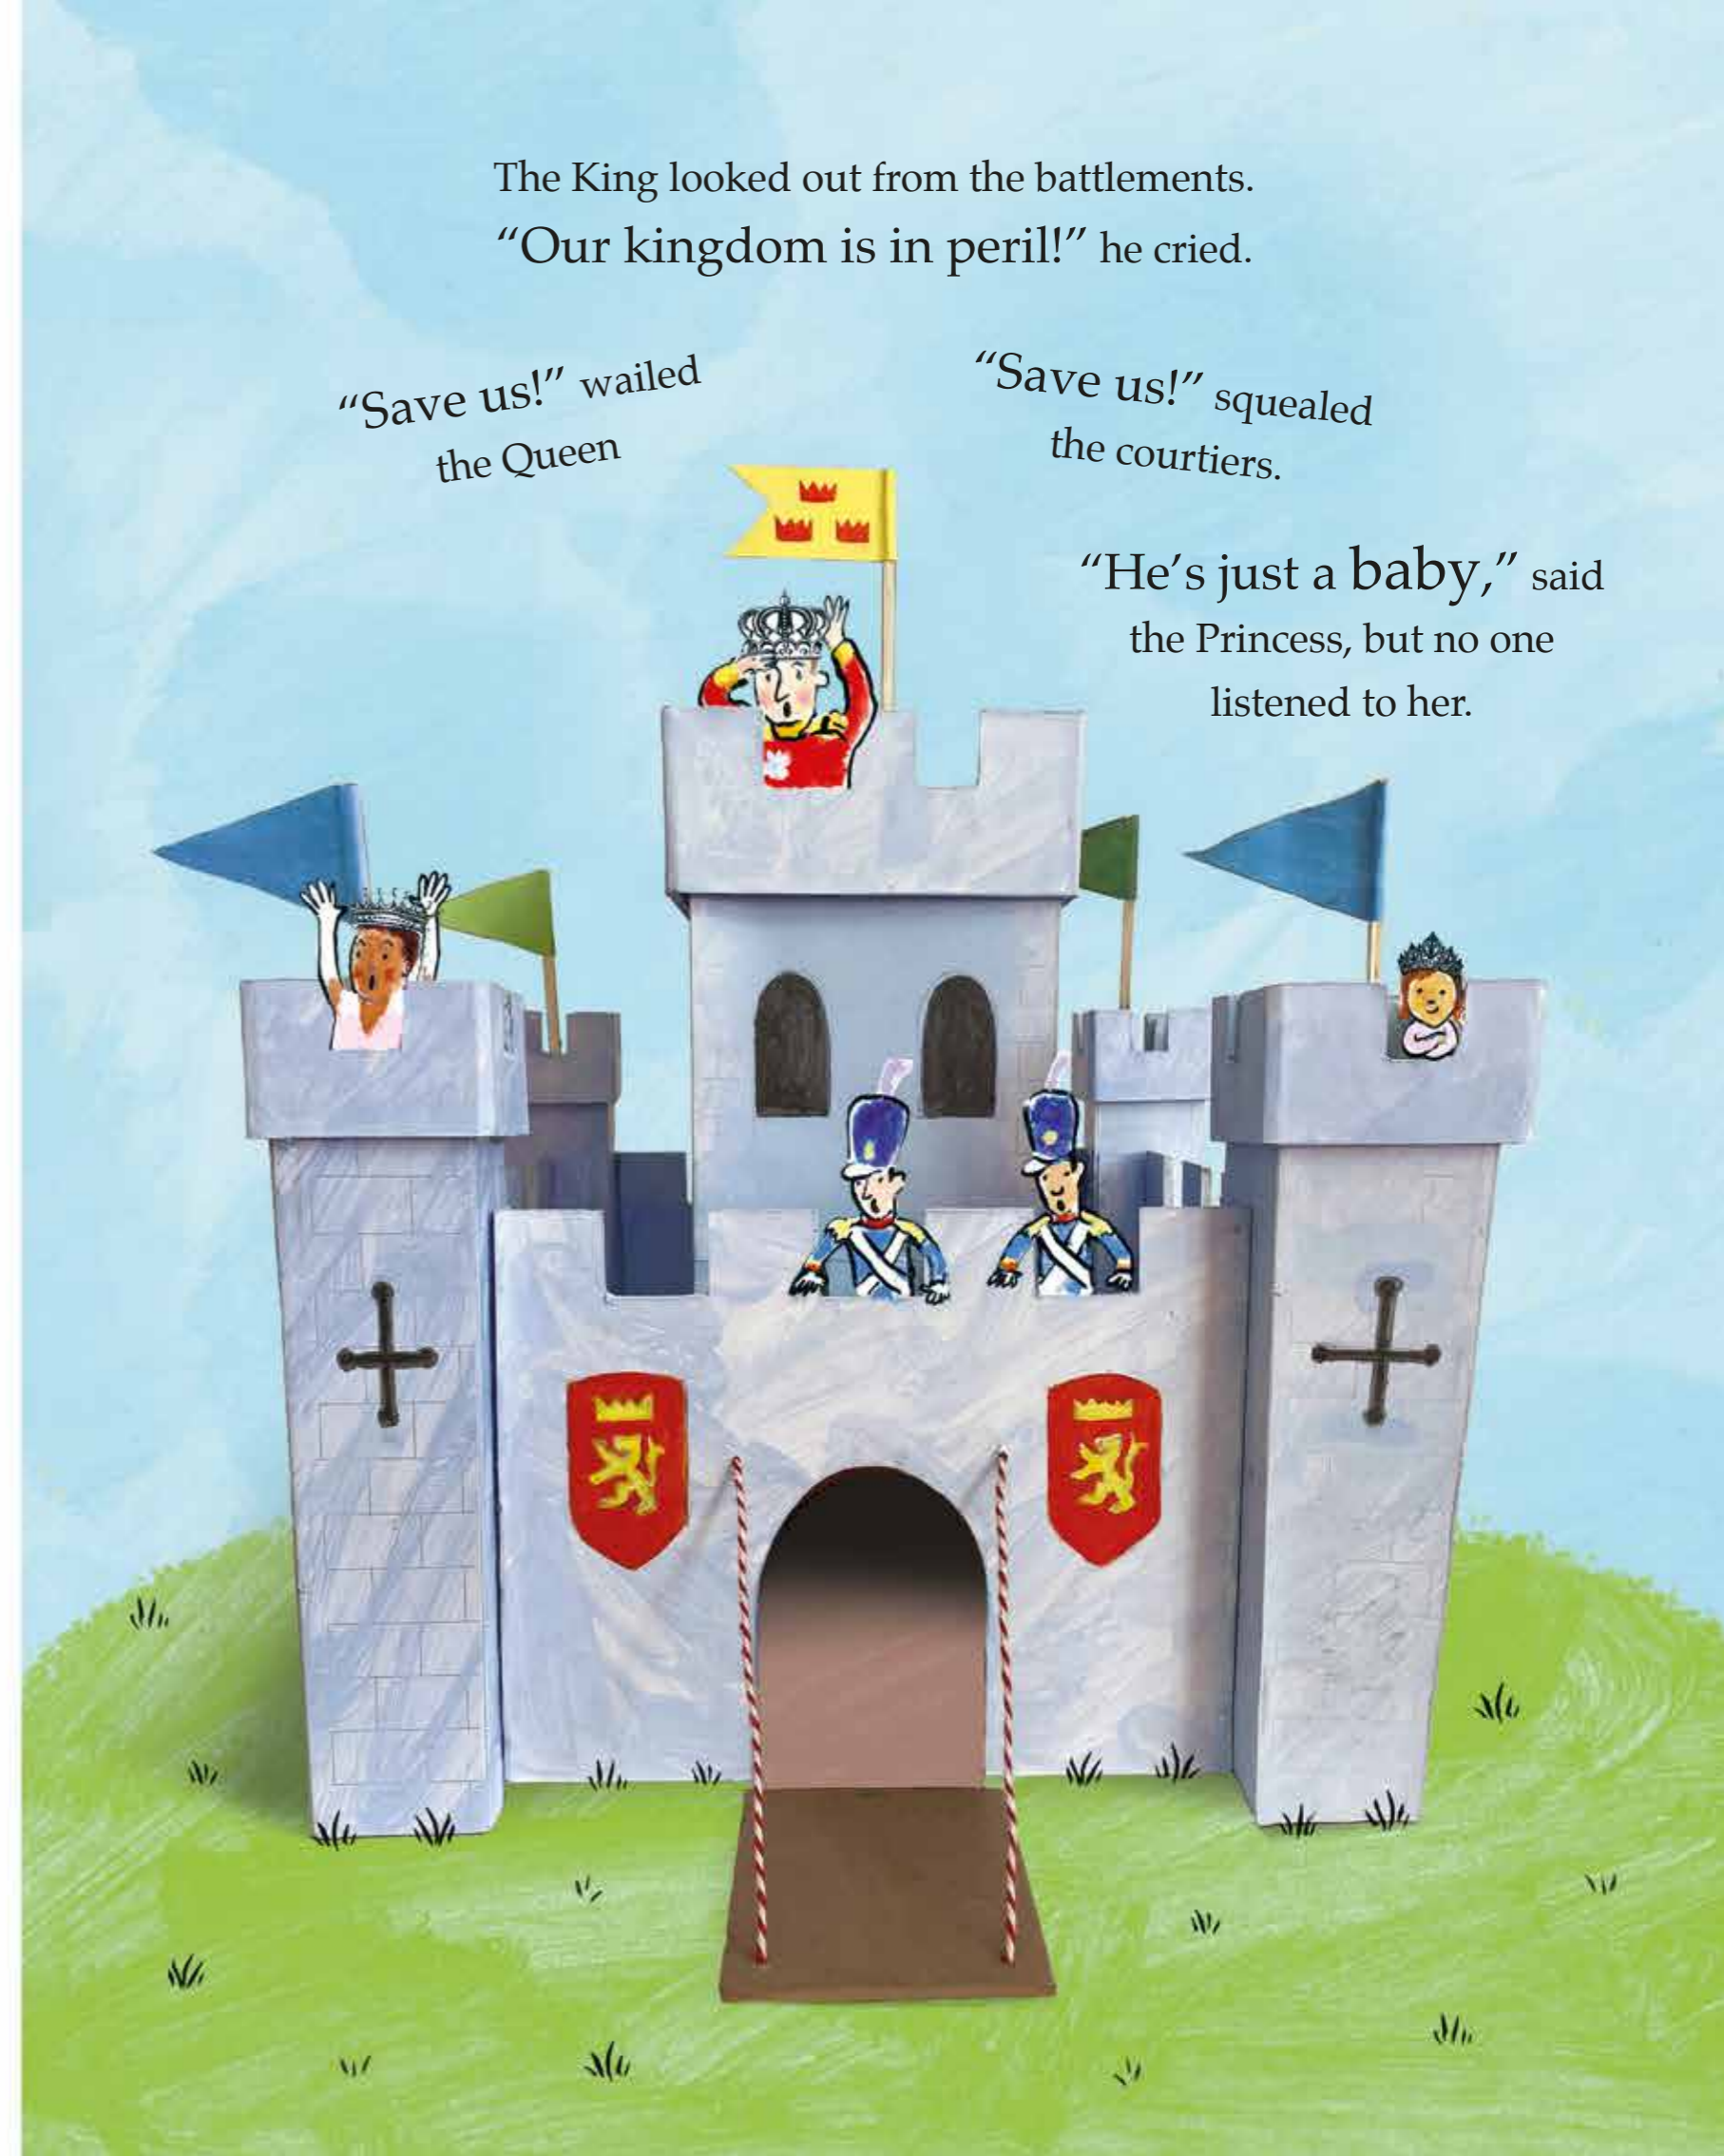

The King looked out from the battlements.

“Our kingdom is in peril!” he cried.

“Save us!” wailed
the Queen

“Save us!” squealed
the courtiers.

“He’s just a baby,” said
the Princess, but no one
listened to her.

Giant Baby toppled the tallest mountains.

Giant Baby trampled the forest.

Giant Baby flattened houses and bridges.

The people of the kingdom were running for their lives.

"Do something!"
yelled the Queen.

"Do something!"
yelled the courtiers.

"Do something!"
yelled the King.

The Queen
rolled her eyes.

"Oh,
you want ME
to do something,"
said the King. "But WHAT?"

"He's just a baby," said the Princess,
but no one listened to her.

Giant Baby sat down
plop!
on the train station.

bus.

The King summoned his advisers.

The King banged the table.
“We need a plan!”
he said.

“An international PEACE
conference . . .”

“This calls for
expert diplomacy!”
said his advisers.

“Delicate
negotiations!”

“He’s just a baby,”
said the Princess, but no one
listened to her.

through the castle wall.

Giant Baby stood at the castle gate.

The King looked very serious indeed.

“My friends,” he said. “We must defend ourselves.”

“He’s just a baby,” said
the Princess, but no one
listened to her.

“Send out my knights in shining armour!” said the King.
