Blow, Wind, Blow!

Dom Conlon & Anastasia Izlesou

GRAFFEG

An illustration of a bright, sunny day. In the foreground, a field of colorful flowers in shades of pink, orange, and yellow is interspersed with green grass and small blue flowers. A clothesline stretches across the middle ground, with several items of clothing hanging from it. On the left, a pair of red and white striped sleeves hangs down. To the right, a pair of black shorts with a blue floral pattern is visible. In the upper right corner, a pair of orange and white striped sleeves hangs from the line. The background shows a clear blue sky with a few wispy clouds and a bright sun. The overall style is vibrant and cheerful.

Heat-snatcher, pressure-catcher,
Wind borrows strength from the Earth.

With a huff and a puff, Wind bellows a breeze
and the shirt sleeves all cheer in the air.

What a wheeze that was, what a blast of good fun,
now Wind wants to do it again.

Go further, go farther
grow big and grow strong and Blow, Wind, Blow!

Curling over fences and into the trees
Wind scatters leaves like a sneeze.

And when a chirruping chick leaps from a nest,
Wind's breezy hands help her fly.

Then Wind plucks a sycamore seed from a tree and helicopters it over the hills.

To Holland's stout windmills, which stand like white dresses, grinding down grain for our cakes.

There's a flurry of flour - the miller's all white and Wind whistles away with a laugh.

Go further, go farther
grow big and grow strong and Blow, Wind, Blow!
