and the Ocean Parade

TRRRRINGGGG went my clamshell alarm clock.

I sat up in bed feeling confused for a moment before I remembered where I was—in my bedroom in the royal palace! A few months ago, my mum and King Auster got married, which I suppose makes me a princess. I have two houses because I spend half my time at the palace and half with my dad who lives in a small pearly pink house on the other side of Scallop City. I was still getting used to living in two different places and I was still getting used to being a princess. I didn't feel like one at all yet. I don't look anything like my graceful stepsister Delphina. My hair is all spiky and wild (which is exactly how I like it) and I have a wriggly little octopus for a pet!

I slipped out of bed, uncurling my tail. Tiny bubbles danced in the water.

'Come on Inkibelle!' I said to my pet octopus who was still snoozing soundly on my sea-sponge pillow. 'Time to get up for school!'

Inkibelle does not like getting up for school.

I poked her but she only curled up tighter so I left her snoozing while I swam out of my bedroom and down the shell-studded corridor to the bathroom. On my way, I bumped into Delphina.

‘Emerald,’ she cried.

‘Good morning!’ Then she stretched her arms out wide and I knew she was coming in for a hug. Delphina is a very affectionate mermaid. I found her a tiny bit annoying when I first moved in to the palace a few months ago, but

I am getting used to her now.

‘I’ll race you to breakfast!’ she cried,
and then swished away in a flurry of bubbles.

‘You’re late!’ said Mum when I finally made it down to the grand dining room,
with Inkibelle swimming along behind me.

‘Sorry!’ I said. ‘Inkibelle just didn’t want to get up this morning!’

Inkibelle poked me crossly with one of her tentacles and pouted.

‘Well it’s true!’ I said as I sat down next to Delphina, who was already tucking in to some sea-crunch cereal.

I pulled a slice of mermaid toast towards me and spread it thickly with pale green seaweed butter.

‘We’ve been talking about the Ocean Parade!’ said Delphina excitedly. ‘I can’t wait!’

Immediately I felt my insides fizz with excitement. I love the Ocean Parade! It happens every year to celebrate the new summer sea season arriving and I’ve been to it since I was a tiny mermaid. There’s lots of delicious food, music and dancing, and everyone dresses up. Dressing up is my favourite part! A stream of pretty floats parade through the streets of Scallop City, including the royal carriage.

Last year I went to the parade with my school friends and it was the best day ever! We dressed up in all our spangles and sparkles, ate crispy-kelp and sea-flower floss and danced to music as the floats paraded by. I smiled as I remembered all the fun we'd had.

'I can't wait either!' I said.

Delphina grinned happily at me. 'What kind of headdress will you wear Emerald?'

'Well, last year me and my friends bought sea-flower crowns from a stall and . . .'

‘I mean which royal headdress will you choose!’ said Delphina. ‘You’ll be in the carriage with the royal family this year remember! It’s tradition for us all to wear big fancy headdresses!’

I frowned and looked at Mum and Auster but they both just smiled and nodded.

‘Your first parade in the royal carriage!’ said Mum. ‘Won’t that be exciting!’

‘Um . . .’ I said. It hadn’t occurred to me that I would have to ride in the royal carriage during the parade, but I supposed that I would have to, now I was a mermaid princess.

It was taking some getting used to.

‘But the royal carriage rides through the centre of Scallop City and then ends up back at the palace,’ I said. ‘We won’t have time to join in any of the fun!’

‘There will be a special party back here at the palace,’ smiled Auster. ‘With very fancy food!’

I thought back to the crispy-kelp and sea-flower floss I had bought from a stall last year. I doubted there would be anything like that served at the palace. I don’t think I’m really cut out to be a proper princess, I thought despondently.

I didn’t look like one.

I didn’t eat like one.

And I definitely didn't feel like one!

'Do I have to go in the royal carriage?' I asked. 'I'd much rather hang out with my school friends.'

Delphina's face fell and Auster looked a bit disappointed.

'I mean,' I said hurriedly. 'I don't think anyone will want to see me in the carriage,'

'Of course they will!' said Auster. 'You're a mermaid princess now! You absolutely have to be there.'

'You do,' agreed Mum firmly.

I sighed, putting my piece of toast back onto my plate. Suddenly I didn't really feel very hungry. The thought of not being able to go to the Ocean Parade with my friends was not a nice feeling. And the thought of having to sit in the royal carriage and be on show to everyone in the kingdom was even worse! I was nothing like Delphina. She looks and acts like a proper princess. I'm just . . . me.

'There's a headdress fitting this afternoon after school,' said Auster. 'It'll be fun, I promise.'

I nodded glumly and Mum tried to reassure me with an encouraging glance.

'Don't worry Emerald,' she said.

‘We’ll find a headdress you really like.’

I gave her a watery smile.

‘Maybe,’ I said doubtfully.
