BUSTER BOOKS

On a long sandy beach with white foaming waves,
a small hermit crab is just starting his day.

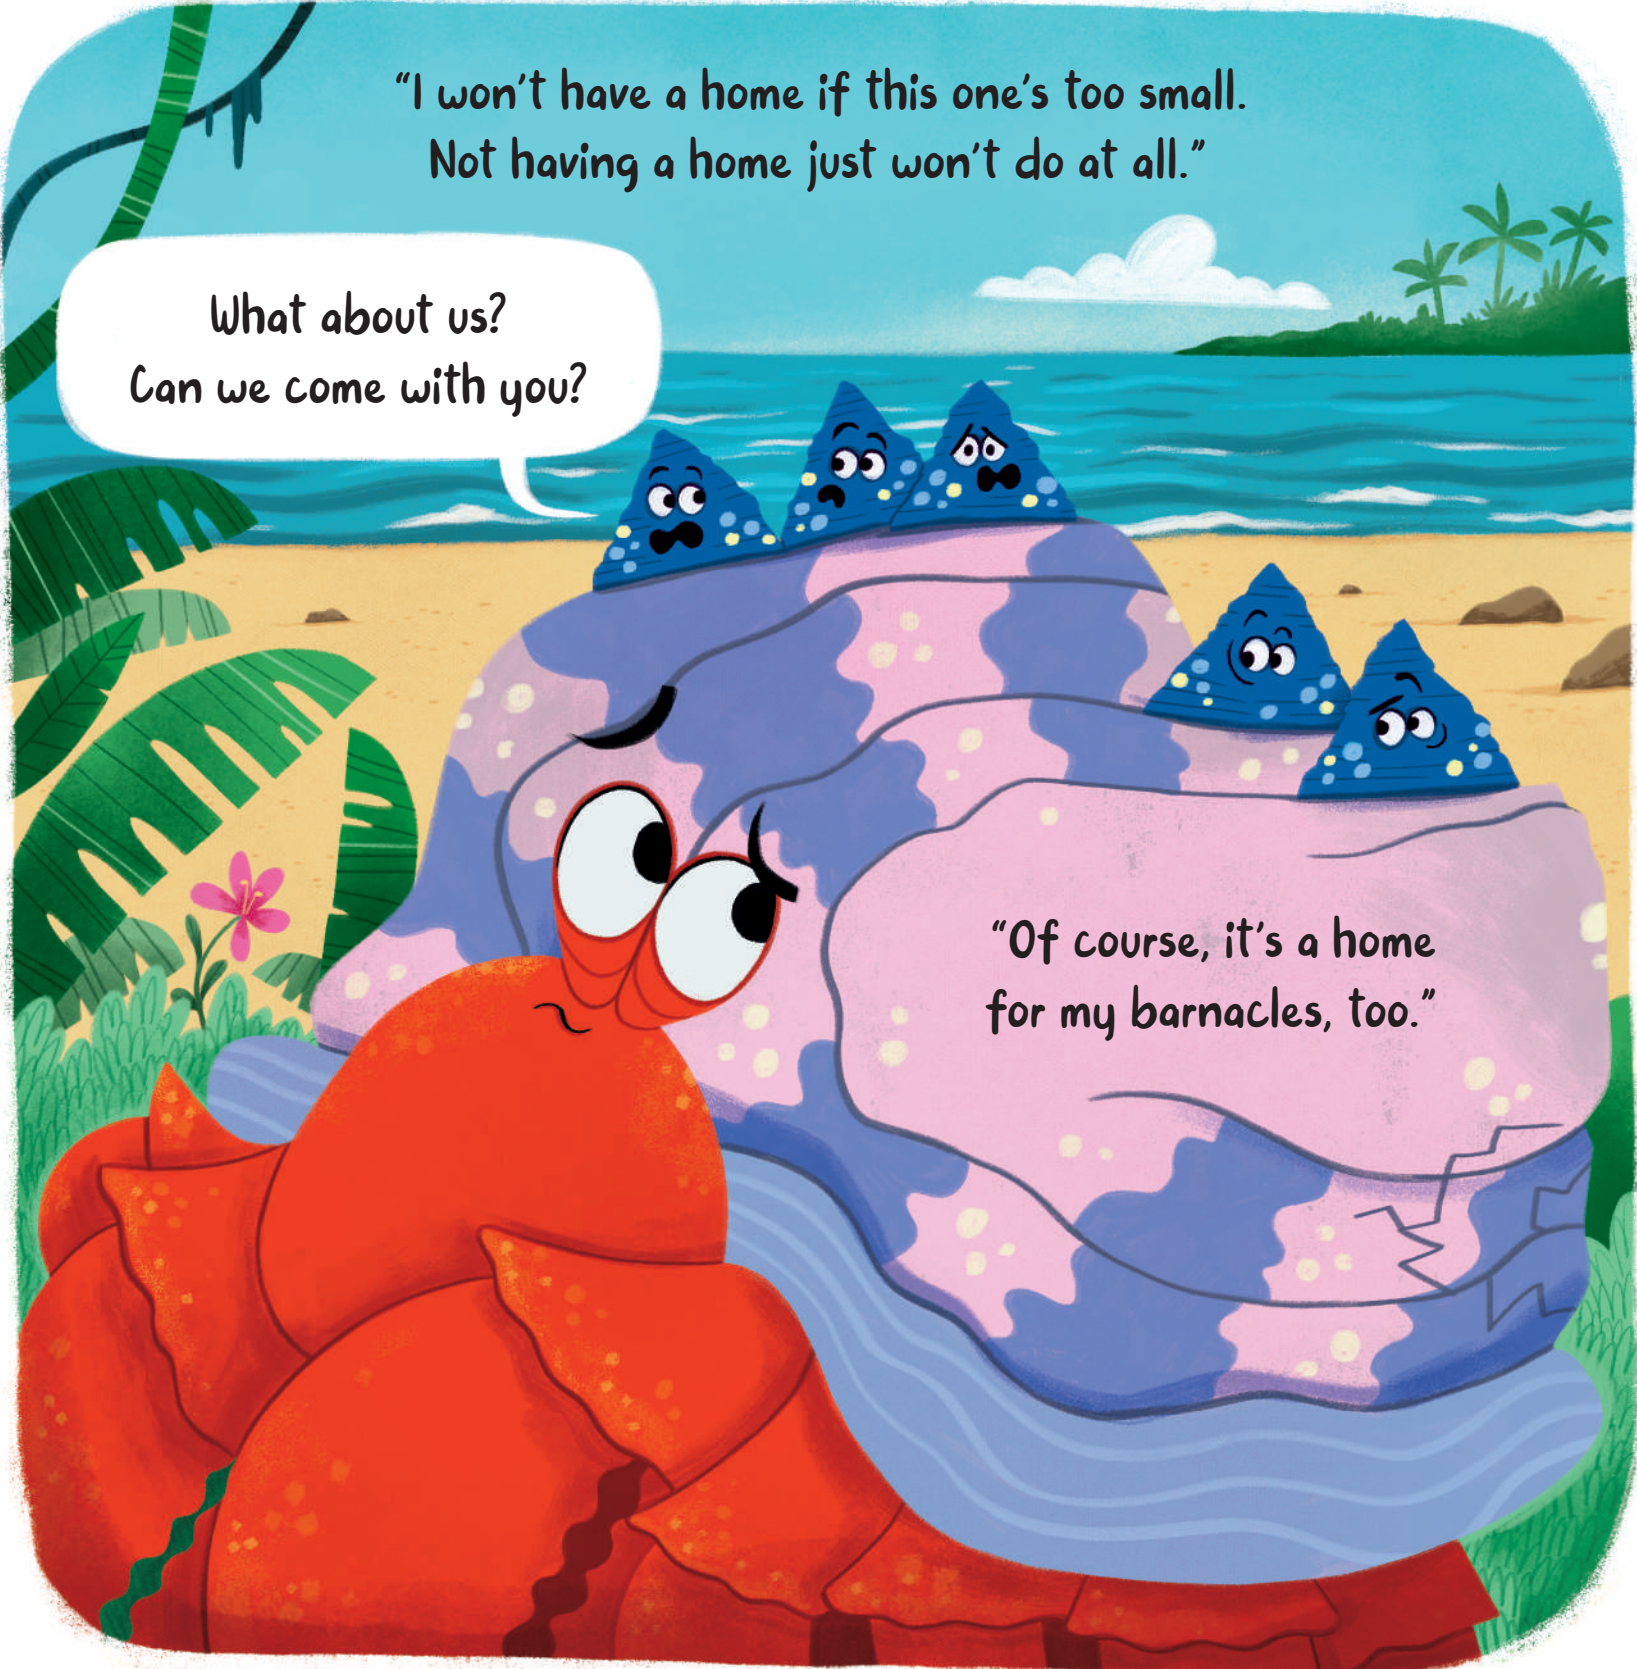

He yawns and he stretches,

but something's not right.

"It's my shell," Sheldon says.
"It's getting too tight!"

"I won't have a home if this one's too small.
Not having a home just won't do at all."

What about us?
Can we come with you?

"Of course, it's a home
for my barnacles, too."

“So let’s find a shell that fits like a dream.
We’ll look by the shore and the trickling stream.”

Off Sheldon scuttles, searching around,
but wherever he looks there are none to be found.

"Oh no!" cries poor Sheldon.

"What am I to do?
A crab needs a shell,
like a foot needs a shoe."

"It's my love. It's my life.
It's the home on my back.
Without it I'll just be a quick seagull snack!"
