

Helping you choose books for children

0-5

5-7

7-9

9-12

12+

Opening extract from
Brilliant Billy
Does His Bit

Written by

Simon Hutton

illustrated by

Caroline Glicksman

Published by

Andersen Press

All text is copyright of the author and illustrator

Please print off and read at your

First published in Great Britain in 2009 by ANDERSEN PRESS LIMITED
20 Vauxhall Bridge Road
London SW1V 2SA
www.andersenpress.co.uk

All rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced, stored in a retrieval system or transmitted in any form, or by any means, electronic, mechanical, photocopying, recording or otherwise, without the written permission of the publisher.

The rights of Simon Hutton and Caroline Glicksman to be identified as the author and illustrator of this work have been asserted by them in accordance with the Copyright, Designs and Patents Act, 1988.

Text copyright © Simon Hutton, 2009
Illustration copyright © Caroline Glicksman, 2009

British Library Cataloguing in Publication Data available.

ISBN 978 184 270 855 2

Printed and bound in Great Britain by CPI Bookmarque, Croydon CR0 4TD

Chapter One

All week at school, Billy had been learning about the war, and today a man called Mr. Hoe had come in to tell them all about it.

‘Who likes sweets?’ Mr. Hoe asked.

Sweets! Billy thrust a hand into the air. The last man to come into class had been dressed as Father Christmas, and he'd given out chocolate money. But Mr. Hoe was no Father Christmas.

'Sweets are off the menu, I'm afraid. It's fresh vegetables or nothing.' The whole class let out a groan.

'What about fruit?' Billy suggested.

The rest of the class giggled. Billy frowned. Of course sweets were better than fruit, but fruit was fine in an emergency, wasn't it?

Mr. Hoe smiled at him.

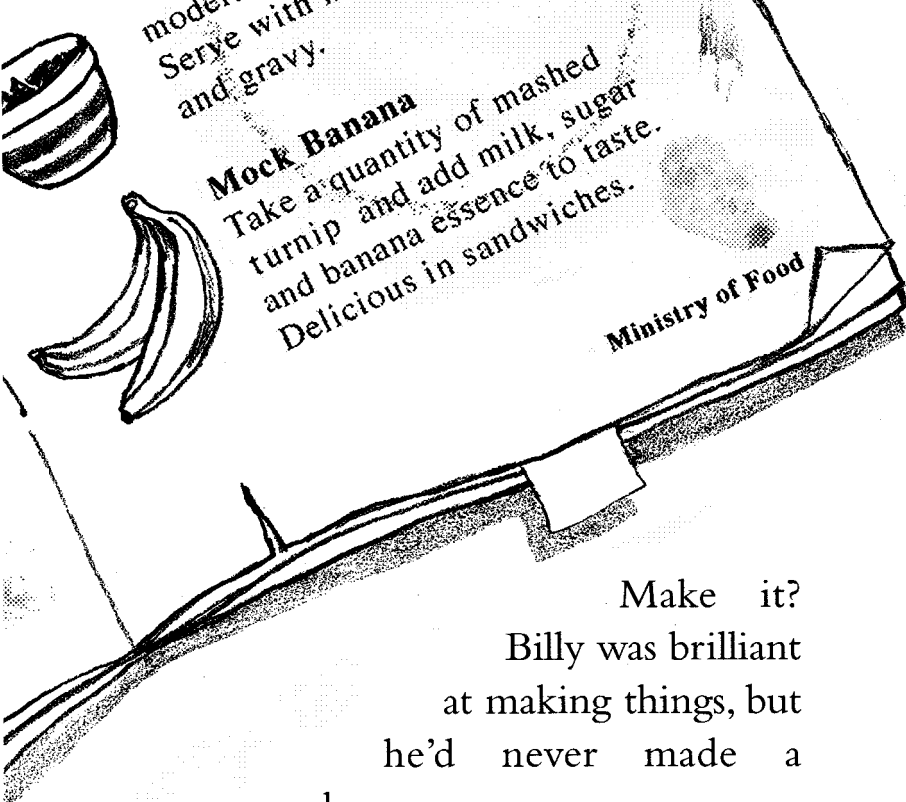

'Something sweet, like a banana?' he suggested, obviously catching

Billy's drift. Billy nodded eagerly. But Mr. Hoe shook his head.

'If you want a banana, you have to make it yourself.'

modern.
Serve with
and gravy.

Mock Banana

Take a quantity of mashed turnip and add milk, sugar
and banana essence to taste.
Delicious in sandwiches.

Ministry of Food

Make it?

Billy was brilliant
at making things, but he'd never made a banana.

'Mash up some turnips, and add banana essence,' Mr. Hoe told the class. 'Better than the real thing, in my opinion. In fact, I still eat them like that to this day.'

You even had to grow the turnips first, Billy learned. Everyone had to grow their own vegetables when there was a war on. It was part of 'doing your bit', which meant helping out in any way you could.

'We'll soon all have the chance to do our bit,' said Miss Plum, Billy's teacher. 'I thought we'd hold a wartime street party in the playground. A street party is where people bring their tables and chairs and set them up outside, and everybody brings food and drink to share. Mr. Hoe is going to bring one of his prize turnips from his allotment, and I'd like you children to bring along something, too – maybe you'd even like to try growing your own vegetables.'

That was what Billy would do! He was brilliant at growing things!

He started planning it all out in his head, when someone asked Mr. Hoe when the war had ended.

What a silly question! The war ended when the soldiers stopped fighting, of course!

So Billy was surprised when Mr. Hoe said that for some people, the war had never ended.

‘I think what Mr. Hoe means is that for some people, the war was so horrible they can never forget it,’ said Miss Plum.

But Billy wasn’t so sure. Perhaps Miss Plum just wanted them to think the war was over. After all, war was all about fighting, and she might be worried it would upset them. It certainly upset Miss Plum. You only had to pinch the person next to you and she'd shout.

If the war was over, why were they having a street party?

And if the war was over, why was Mr. Hoe still making his own bananas?

