

Helping your children choose books they will love

LoveReading4kids.co.uk is a book website created for parents and children to make choosing books easy and fun

Opening extract from
Worse Things Happen at Sea

Written by Alan Snow

Published by
Oxford University Press

All Text is Copyright © of the Author and/or Illustrator

Please print off and read at your leisure.

The Ratbridge Nautical Laundry

Chapter I

DIRTY WASHING

Arthur and his grandfather were on deck, helping pack up piles of washing to be returned to the customers of the Ratbridge Nautical Laundry. Around them the rats and pirates were all hard at work checking lists, hanging out clothes to dry, and emptying baskets of dirty washing down the hatch into the bilges to be washed.

‘Almost out of washing powder!’ shouted a rat called Bert as he tipped a shovel of pink powder down the hatch after the washing.

He tipped a shovel of pink powder down the hatch after the washing

‘You don’t half get through a lot,’ commented Arthur.

‘Not surprising given the state of this place’s underwear. Takes some shifting,’ smiled Grandfather.

Then there was a commotion on the towpath. They turned to see policemen and an angry mob heading in their direction.

‘What now?’ muttered Tom, the worried-looking captain and laundry manager.

The police reached the gangplank and the unruly mob stopped behind them.

‘String them up!’

‘Hanging’s too good for them!’

‘Shame! Shame!’

Tom led the crew to the top of the gangplank to face the crowd.

One of the policemen came forward, pulled a piece of paper from his jacket, looked up at Tom and spoke.

Policemen and an angry mob

‘Sir, are you in charge of this operation?’

‘... Yes ...’

‘Well, I hereby arrest you and your crew.’

‘SHAME ON THEM!’ cried the mob.

‘What have we done?’ Tom and the crew had kept the town’s laundry and their noses clean ever since they had opened.

‘Earlier this morning the famous Countess Grogforth visited the town on a ceremonial shopping trip and was shocked to see the town’s underwear flying from your rigging in a rude display.’

‘We’re a laundry! It’s just drying clothes,’ Tom protested.

Kipper, the pirate by his side, was going red with indignation. ‘Yes. And it’s the town’s clothes!’

‘That is not my concern. Countess Grogforth passed comment on the unfashionable and coarse nature of the said underwear, and was so shocked that she fainted away, damaging her wig, her high born sensibilities, and the town’s pride. She is now seeking compensation for that injury and the town is suing for damages to its reputation.’

The damaged wig

‘This is ridiculous!’ whispered Arthur.

His friends remained silent.

‘As a law officer of this town I hereby serve you all with this arrest warrant and summons to appear at court at ten tomorrow morning. You’re to remain here on the ship under police guard until we accompany you to court,’ the policeman said. Then, pointing to the washing in the rigging with his truncheon, he added: ‘And take that washing in or there’ll be further charges.’

Leaning in towards the crew so that he couldn’t be heard by the mob around him, he quietly added, ‘Did you get the stains out of my vest?’

The stained vest