

Helping your children choose books they will love

Lovereading4kids.co.uk is a book website created for parents and children to make choosing books easy and fun

Opening extract from
Greyhound of a Girl

Written by
Roddy Doyle

Published by
Marion Lloyd Books

All Text is Copyright © of the Author and/or Illustrator

Please print off and read at your leisure.

Paper cut illustrations
Julene Harrison

First published in the UK in 2011 by Marion Lloyd Books

An imprint of Scholastic Children's Books

Euston House, 24 Eversholt Street

London, NW1 1DB, UK

A division of Scholastic Ltd.

Registered office: Westfield Road, Southam, Warwickshire, CV47 0RA

SCHOLASTIC and associated logos are trademarks and/or registered trademarks of Scholastic Inc.

Text copyright © Roddy Doyle, 2011

Papercut and endpaper map illustrations © Julene Harrison, 2011

The rights of Roddy Doyle and Julene Harrison to be identified as the author and illustrator of this work have been asserted by them.

ISBN 9781407129334

A CIP catalogue record for this book is available from the British Library

All rights reserved

This book is sold subject to the condition that it shall not, by way of trade or otherwise, be lent, hired out or otherwise circulated in any form of binding or cover other than that in which it is published. No part of this publication may be reproduced, stored in a retrieval system, or transmitted in any form or by any means (electronic, mechanical, photocopying, recording or otherwise) without the prior written permission of Scholastic Limited.

Printed by Bookmarque Ltd, Croydon, Surrey

Papers used by Scholastic Children's Books are made from wood grown in sustainable forests.

1 3 5 7 9 10 8 6 4 2

This is a work of fiction. Names, characters, places, incidents and dialogues are products of the author's imagination or are used fictitiously. Any resemblance to actual people, living or dead, events or locales is entirely coincidental.

www.scholastic.co.uk/zone

“But your dad wasn’t a stranger.”

“Yes, he was. He must have been.”

“He wasn’t strange,” said her mother. “He was nice.”

“Nice?” said Mary. “The nice fellas are the ones you should be worried about.”

Her mother laughed.

“What’s so funny?” said Mary.

“Who told you that?”

“Granny.”

“I should have known,” said her mother. “Well, never mind your granny.”

“Don’t talk to strangers, never mind your granny,” said Mary. “I’ll have no one left to talk to.”

“But you know what I mean,” said her mother.

“About strangers?”

“Yes.”

“Don’t worry,” said Mary. “I won’t talk to any.”

But she did – now.

“How do you know about my granny?” she asked the woman.

“Ah sure, I just do,” said the woman.

She stood back, and shimmered – kind of – as if she was stepping behind a sheet of clear plastic.

“It’s life,” she said – and she was solid again, and smiling.

But Mary was a bit scared, and cold.

“I have to go,” she said.

“Right, so,” said the woman.

She didn’t step out of the way. She didn’t seem to move at all. But, even so, she must have, because she wasn't in front of Mary any more.

Mary walked quickly to her gate. She heard the woman behind her.

"Do one small thing for me, Mary."

Mary turned.

"Tell your granny it'll all be grand," said the woman – she was still smiling.

"How did you know my name?" Mary asked her.

"Sure, half the girls in Ireland are called Mary," said the woman.

"No, they aren't," said Mary. "I'm the only one on our road."

"Well, they were all called Mary in my day," said the woman. "Off you go, so. I'll see you the next time."

The next time? Mary should have been worried, even frightened. She was worried, and a bit frightened. But not nearly as much as she thought she should have been. This woman had come out of nowhere. She knew Mary's name and all about her granny – Mary should have been terrified. But she wasn't. Something about the woman, the way she spoke, her face, her smile – she seemed familiar. Mary didn't know her – but she did.

She wasn't terrified. But, still, she ran to the front door and rang the bell instead of getting her key from her school bag. As she rang the bell she turned. But the woman had gone.

She heard the door opening.

"Mary!"

It was her mother.

“How was school?!”

“Stupid.”

She went straight past her mother, into the hall.

“What’s your hurry?!”

“I’m starving.”

Losing your best friend was heartbreaking but some things about it weren't too bad. So far, Mary had been promised new jeans, two new tops, a trip to the cinema, and French toast for her lunch two days in a row.

There was no smell of French toast when her mother opened the door but that was okay, because Mary was the one who was going to make it. She'd decided to become a chef.

"Great idea!" said her mother.

"Stop talking like that," said Mary.

"Like what?!"

"Like !!!!!!!!!!!!!!"

"Oh, no!" said her mother, whose name was Scarlett.

"I don't talk like that! Do I?!"

"Yes, you do."

“What?! Always?!”

“Yes!”

“I’m sorry!” Scarlett whispered.

“Even your whispers end in !!!s,” Mary whispered back.

“You said you wanted to be a chef.”

“That’s right.”

“A world famous chef, I think you said.”

“Right again.”

“So, what do you concentrate on first?! ‘World’, or ‘famous’, or ‘chef’?!”

This was the kind of question Mary loved, so she gave it some thought.

“Chef,” she said, after about ten seconds.

“I think you’re right!” said Scarlett.

“I know I am,” said Mary. “You have to be a chef before you can be a famous one.”

“Yes!”

“The same way, like, I’d have to murder someone if I wanted to become a world famous murderer,” said Mary. “Not that I’m looking at anyone in particular.”

Cheekiness was often a sign of intelligence. So Scarlett usually liked it when Mary was being cheeky. My brainy daughter has insulted me yet again! Sometimes, though, it was just tiring, and even Mary’s snores sounded cheeky.

“Oh, shut up, Mary!” said Scarlett.

And Mary did. Because, if cheekiness was often a sign of intelligence, so was keeping your mouth shut.

The plan was, Mary would cook something different