

Helping your children choose books they will love

Lovereading4kids.co.uk is a book website created for parents and children to make choosing books easy and fun

Opening extract from
The Tales of
Olga Da Polga

Written by Michael Bond

Published by
Oxford University Press

All Text is Copyright © of the Author and/or Illustrator

Please print off and read at your leisure.

The Tales of
Olga da Polga

For Karen — M.B.

For my mum, Elizabeth, who used to read
The Tales of Olga da Polga to me when I was little — C.R.

Other Olga da Polga stories

Olga Meets Her Match
Olga Carries On
Olga Takes Charge
Olga Moves House
Olga Follows Her Nose

MICHAEL BOND
CREATOR OF PADDINGTON BEAR

The Tales of Olga da Polga

ILLUSTRATED BY CATHERINE RAYNER

OXFORD
UNIVERSITY PRESS

OXFORD
UNIVERSITY PRESS

Great Clarendon Street, Oxford OX2 6DP
Oxford University Press is a department of the University of Oxford.
It furthers the University's objective of excellence in research, scholarship, and education by publishing worldwide in

Oxford New York
Auckland Cape Town Dar es Salaam Hong Kong Karachi
Kuala Lumpur Madrid Melbourne Mexico City Nairobi
New Delhi Shanghai Taipei Toronto

With offices in
Argentina Austria Brazil Chile Czech Republic France Greece
Guatemala Hungary Italy Japan Poland Portugal Singapore
South Korea Switzerland Thailand Turkey Ukraine Vietnam

Oxford is a registered trade mark of Oxford University Press in the UK and in certain other countries

Text © Michael Bond 1971
Illustrations © Catherine Rayner 2011

The moral rights of the author have been asserted
Database right Oxford University Press (maker)

First published 1971
This edition first published 2011

All rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced, stored in a retrieval system, or transmitted, in any form or by any means,
without the prior permission in writing of Oxford University Press, or as expressly permitted by law, or under terms agreed with the appropriate reprographics rights organization. Enquiries concerning reproduction outside the scope of the above should be sent to the Rights Department, Oxford University Press, at the address above

You must not circulate this book in any other binding or cover and you must impose this same condition on any acquirer

British Library Cataloguing in Publication Data
Data available

ISBN: 978-0-19-273193-7
1 3 5 7 9 10 8 6 4 2

Printed in Great Britain

Paper used in the production of this book is a natural, recyclable product made from wood grown in sustainable forests.
The manufacturing process conforms to the environmental regulations of the country of origin.

Contents

1.	Olga Sets Out	1
2.	The Naming of Olga da Polga	13
3.	Olga Takes a Bite	27
4.	Olga's Story	37
5.	Olga Makes a Friend	47
6.	Olga's Day Off	59
7.	Olga Wins a Prize	71
8.	Olga Starts a Rumour	83
9.	Olga and the 'Surrey Puma'	97
10.	Disaster	109
11.	The Dance of the Sugar Plum Guinea-Pig	119
12.	The Night of the Moon Rockets	129
13.	An Unexpected Visit	141

Chapter 1

Olga Sets Out

From the very beginning there was not the slightest doubt that Olga da Polga was the sort of guinea-pig who would go places.

There was a kind of charm about her, something in the set of her whiskers, an extra devil-may-care twirl to the rosettes in her brown and white fur, and a gleam in her eyes, which set her apart.

Even her name had an air of romance. How she had come by it was something of a mystery, and Olga herself told so many fanciful tales about moonlit nights, castles in the air, and fields awash with oats and beautiful princesses—each tale wilder than the one before—that none of the other guinea-pigs in the pet shop knew what to believe.

However, everyone agreed that it suited her right to the very tips of her fourteen toes, and if some felt that it wouldn't come amiss if Olga was taken down a whisker or two it was noticeable none of them tried to do it, though many of them talked of the dangers of going out into the world alone, and without the protection of the humans who normally looked after them.

'You can't do without the Sawdust People,' warned one old-stager known as Sale or Return, who'd lived in the shop for as long as anyone could remember and was always listened to with respect because he'd once been away for two whole days. 'It's a cold, hard world outside.'

But Olga would have none of it. 'You can stay here if you like,' she would announce, standing in the middle of the feeding bowl in order to address the others. 'But one of these days I'm going. Wheweee! Just you wait. As soon as I see my chance I shall be away.'

Olga was never quite sure whether she really believed her words or not, but she liked the sound of them, and secretly she also rather enjoyed the effect they had on the others.

Each night, before she settled down in the straw, she would look at her reflection in the water bowl, puffing out her cheeks and preening herself so that she would look her best if any likely looking customers came along.

And then it happened.

Quite unexpectedly, and not at all in the way Olga had always pictured it.

There were no grand farewells.

There was no battle royal.

No wild dash for freedom.

There were no cheers whatsoever.

In fact it was all over in a flash.

One morning, just as Olga was in the middle of her breakfast, a shadow fell across the cage and she looked up and saw a row of faces outside staring in at her.

There was the Sawdust Person she knew as the owner of the pet shop; a man she had never seen before; and a small girl.

It was the girl who caught Olga's gaze as she looked up from the feeding bowl, and as their eyes met a finger came through the bars.

‘That’s the one,’ the girl said. ‘The one with the cheeky look and the oats sticking to her whiskers.’

The door in the roof of the cage clanged open and a rough, hairy hand descended.

‘She’s yours for twenty-two and a half new pence,’ said the gruff voice of the pet-shop owner, grabbing hold of Olga. ‘To tell the truth I shan’t be sorry to see the back of her. She’s been a bit of a trouble-maker ever since she came in.’

Olga gave a squeak of outrage and alarm, and as she disappeared from view, kicking and struggling, some of the older guinea-pigs nodded their heads wisely with an ‘I told you so’ expression on their faces.

But many of the younger ones looked rather envious, for when your world is only two foot square almost anything else promises to be more exciting. Some of them were put off their food for the rest of the morning.

But if the other inhabitants of the pet shop wondered what was going on when Olga da Polga suddenly disappeared from view, Olga herself was in a dreadful state.

She didn’t mind standing on an open and friendly hand once in a while, but it was quite a different matter being grabbed hold of and plonked—there was no other word for it—plonked into a cardboard box without so much as a by-your-leave.

Straight after a large breakfast too!

Her heart was beating like a tom-tom. Her dignity was shattered, her fur ruffled beyond description.

To cap it all she felt sick.

